Summary

The Wrong Man is a police story set in Australia. One of the men staying in a hotel in Uluru in the middle of Australia wants to kill the Police Commissioner, who is coming to that town on Monday. Somebody writes an anonymous letter to warn the police. Steve Malone works for the police in Sydney and he must find the killer, whose name begins with "M". The suspects are Micky Munro, a singer; William Mortimer, a businessman, and Dr. Eric Manton. With the help of Sally Peters, a reporter who works for a newspaper, Steve manages to solve the case. He travels to Uluru and finds out from the singer's manager that, in order to commit the crime, the killer has taken on the doctor's identity. They have kidnapped the real doctor and his daughter Joan. As Micky knows the real Dr. Manton from a previous appointment, the killer must get rid of him first. He plans to do this during a visit to the Rock. Steve follows Micky and the killer to the Rock. A park ranger helps him. In a fight, Steve injures the killer, who is taken to hospital. Sally has found the real Dr. Manton in Euralunga and he is reunited with his daughter. Micky invites Sally and Steve to his concert.

Background and themes

Uluru: This is the aboriginal name of Ayers Rock, the second largest monolith in the world, located in central Australia. Climbing it is a popular activity among tourists.

Crime never pays: The Police are always expected to catch criminals. Does this always happen?

Fear: Several people in the story are afraid: Joan is afraid of the kidnapper, Micky's manager is afraid for him, Micky is afraid of the killer on the Rock. What are your students afraid of? What were they afraid of when they were children?
